No pass, no play — no way?

Controversial school reform bill tested in court

by Lisa Toth Angie Hostetler Staff Writer

"You can't treat kids like a sack of potatoes," Principal Joseph Shelton said about House Bill 72. Ever since the education reform bill was passed last summer, some students may have felt trapped, unfairly treated, and tossed around like a bag of vegetables. Students, teachers, and administrators have wondered about the constitutionality of the new laws, and have finally begun to act on their opinions.

Junior Tracy Horne is one of those people. After learning that she could not participate in a drill team trip that had been planned for many months because she failed one class, Horne and her parents filed an injuction to temporarily hold back the law.

"I think the rule is so harsh. The grading period is so long. A six weeks can get you out of a football or baseball season,"

Daydreaming about extracurricular activities may become a thing of the past

"If the law states you can only drive 55 miles per hour, you drive 55 miles per hour. We have no options whether to enforce it." - Shelton

The actual wording of the law states that "in order to be eligible to participate in an extracurricular activity event for a six weeks period following the initial six weeks period of the school year, a student must not have a recorded grade average lower than 70 on a scale of 0 to 100 in any course for that preceding six weeks period."

The new rules have aroused criticism and possibly lowered school morale, but according to Shelton, "You learn to live it."

'A lot of it is great," says Shelton, "but I'm not for taking the joy out of school. Low morale means low productivity.'

The question is whether or not the law is so restrictive that it will actually affect students more negatively than positively.

"The emphasis on keeping up grades is good," Deputy Superintendent Don Thornton said. "It's a desirable goal — I don't think we should give up on that...But "There's been too much confusion this first year," says Thornton. "It will take a longer period of time. Too many interpreta-

"The biggest problem with House Bill 72 is that we're trying to define what is cocurricular and what is extracurricular. There are too many unanswered questions," Thornton said. "The attitude at the start (of this legislative session) was "no changes — give it a chance to work," the legislator said.

Connelly said that a large obstacle in changing the laws is that the Speaker of the House, the Governor and the Lieutenant Governor all are against change at this time. "The closest thing to passage would be modifications," Connelly said.

One possible modification involves rewriting the extracurricular ruling so that pass/fail grades would be based on either a one-week or a three-week grading period instead of a six-week basis. Connelly is in favor of the one-week basis, which would allow students more frequent opportunities

"I'm not for taking the joy out of school." - Shelton

Regardless of how each individual interprets the law or how many people actually agree with it, the law is the law.

As Shelton says, "If the law states you can only drive 55 miles per hour, you drive 55 miles per hour. We have no options whether to enforce it."

The only ones who can make any changes to bring their grades up and would not require them to miss an entire six weeks of extracurricular activities.

Thornton, however, feels that the oneweek basis would impose too much paperwork on the teachers, but that the threeweek basis would work out better for both teacher and student.

Whatever changes will occur in the law itself and in the school system because of that law, Thonrton has high hopes for the

"I want to see the result of House Bill 72 be more kids putting forth more effort and as a result have less failures and more learning in school, but not so inflexible that we can't take care of legitimate difficulties,"

"When all of House Bill 72 is cleaned up and looked at over a period of time a lot of good will have surfaced from it."

On the Friday's before vacation, people come to school but end up leaving during school, according to attendance secretary, Mrs. Charlene Walfing.

"During fourth period, people leave in masses. They have to go home to pack or get ready for a trip. They have notes that say they're ill, but we know they're not," Mrs. Walling said.

Each class keeps a pretty steady absen rate, but the Senior Class, being smallest usually has the most amount students absent.

A special education for special students

The reception was sarm and friendly. The students in the special education classes were open, candid, and just plain nice. It could have been any class. The students didn't look or ast any differently than any other students in school.

There are several types of special educa-tion programs. One special program is Home Room Special Education Depart-mentalized (HR/SED) where students have all academic classes, plus two years of job experience.

The HR/SED classes are designed for those students with learning disabilities. The curriculum is structured around the special need of these special, yet so nor-mal, people. Freshman and sophomore students may have up to five classes in the special clustation deportment, plus IP E. Junior and senior students participate in a work program other full or half time. The thing that most people don't realize is that upon sputhatiston, the student in special clusation is ready to join the job market. These sundents have learned the basic job stills that most of us have not learned.

A program designed to help often carries an unfortunate signate for many. It is had at for the students to overcome the lack of understanding surrounding them. Accor- durate to many of the students, books are en- cused as belonging to someone due or are part of an extra credit assignment.

Golf captures district

One sport often overlooked at Cy-Creek is golf. After coming in second, losing by only two strokes to Conroe in the Del Lago tournament, the golf team produced a district title at Raveneaux by five strokes over Klein. Randy Lee led the Cougars with a 75. This score was also good enough to give him the district individual medal, which he won by one stroke.

"Randy Lee is the best (golfer) because of the course he plays, his access to a good pro, and the years that he has been playing," sophomore Doug Beets said.

The team is successful for many reasons.

The team is successful for many reasons. A lot of practice, with some young golfers, produced good results and things should continue this way for a couple of years. Most of the team members averaged four to five rounds of golf a week.

"We had five good players on varsity who played well consistently," sophomore Doug Sylvestor said. The young team's success should continue next year with four out of five returning varsity members.

The golf team sees many different courses over the season. Some are hard for certain people and their game, while easy for others. It depends on the individual golfer and the strong part of his game.

"The hardest course to play was Atascoscita. It was long and narrow with a lot of troublesome holes," Sophomore Joe Connelly said.

Beets, on the other hand, had a hard time with the Hearthstone course. "My short game wasn't very good at the time, along with my tee shots" Beets said.

The golf course lends itself to many strange occurances. Every golfer, at one time or another, has to stand back and look at what has happened.

"I hit a ball through a tree, and it never came out," Sylvester said.

USFL struggles to live

This year the USFL has encountered financial difficulties which could become the leagues downfall. The leagues philosophy, big bucks attract big names. They have been able to acquire such names as Doug Flutie, and Herschel Walker. The owners of several teams have been unable to pay these titians of the pig-skin the contracts agreed upon. The owners of the generals petitioned that they should not be solely responsible to pay these stars, that it should be a league effort, because the need for the big names is such an integral part to the organizations hopeful success.

In most probability the USFL may find another two seasons of spring time ball until the operation folds. People are really not interested in viewing football year round. It is a seasonal sport. When football's over baseball rolls around and excitement is generated by a new sport. The USFL just has not gained the ability to fill stadiums with their level of ball. Many teams participate on a skill level barely above the college skill level. There are too many players who have received four or more chances to play and are now playing for the USFL. Basically the only benefit of the USFL is a professional sports club brought to cities who do not possess a NFL franchise.

Possibly the stronger teams could be integrated into the NFL in the cities where they do not already have a team. This is the only hope for the USFL to remain alive. The leagues will be unable to stand alone. They are continually losing supporters. They have extreme difficulty acquiring prime-time television coverage. There are many obstacles to overcome, and this achievement is not hopeful. Maybe soon those unwanted USFL penants and souvenirs will become collecters items of a forgotten league.
